Mortgage Rates Hit a 3.5-Year Low This Year

If you're one of the thousands of homebuyers waiting for rates to fall, you should know it's already happening. And this year, they crossed an important milestone. They're the lowest they've been in 3.5 years.

Here's why that's such a big deal.

How Lower Rates Help You

A mortgage rate doesn't just affect the interest you end up paying on your home loan. It shapes your entire buying experience.

When rates were up around 7% just over a year ago, a lot of buyers felt priced out. Payments were higher. Budgets felt tighter. Affordability was a bigger challenge. That's especially true for first-time homebuyers, who felt the biggest pinch.

But according to industry experts, that's starting to change now that rates are slowly inching down. Let's break down why. At a rate around 6% or below, you'll see:

- Lower monthly payments. Redfin shows mortgage payments on a median-priced home are now roughly $300 lower than they were last Spring
- More buying power, thanks to the extra breathing room in your budget

Monthly Payments Are Down Almost $300 Since Last Spring

Median Monthly Mortgage Payment

Sources: Redfin

This kind of monthly savings adds up fast, and totals over $3,300 over the course of a year.

While this isn't enough to completely change the affordability game overnight, think about it this way. You can now make a stronger offer, purchase in a different location, or buy a home that checks more of your boxes. And that feels like a big shift compared to when rates were at 7%.

This Opens the Door for 550,000 Buyers

To drive home just how much this helps potential homebuyers like you, consider this research from the National Association of Realtors (NAR). It shows that when mortgage rates sit around this level, millions more households can afford a home. When rates are at 6% or below:

- 5.5 million more households can afford the median-priced home
- And roughly 550,000 of those people will likely buy a home within 12 to 18 months

That's not just speculation. That's pent-up demand finally getting the green light they've been waiting for. You have the chance right now to get ahead and buy before more people notice the game has just changed. Because the math is already working in your favor.

An Important Call Out

Mortgage rates don't operate in a vacuum. Home prices, local inventory, property taxes, home insurance, and your personal finances still matter. And a rate in this territory doesn't mean every home suddenly works for every buyer.

That's why getting pre-approved and running your numbers with a trusted lender is key.

Still, this rate environment puts more buyers in play than we've seen in years. So, if buying didn't work for you before, it's worth taking another look.

Bottom Line

Affordability is improving. And that may reset the math on your move.

Let's run the numbers together so you can get a rough estimate of how much more buying power you may have than you did just a few months ago.

How Changing Mortgage Rates Affect Your Future Monthly Payment

Experts say rates will stay pretty much where they are now – but some volatility is to be expected. So, you shouldn't try to time the market. It's better to focus on how any change impacts your future mortgage payment.

Home Loan Amount	Fixed Mortgage Interest Rate	Monthly Mortgage P&I*	Monthly Savings Compared to 7.5%
$250,000	7.5%	$1,748	-

Affordability Is Moving in the Right Direction

There's finally good news for anyone who's been priced out or sitting on the sidelines. Buying a home is getting more affordable. While that doesn't mean everyone can suddenly afford a home, the improvement we're seeing matters.

One of the best ways to see the affordability shift is by looking at how much of a household's income it takes to buy a home. According to Zillow, housing is typically considered affordable when it takes 30% or less of your monthly income to cover your expenses. That includes your mortgage payment, taxes, insurance, and basic maintenance.

For the past few years, the math was well above that threshold, and it made buying a home unachievable for many. But now, it's taking less of a typical household's income to buy a home than it did just a few years ago (see graph below):

Now, affordability is still tight. But things are trending in the right direction. And some markets may even fall back under that 30% threshold by the end of this year.

Bottom Line

The improvement isn't happening everywhere at the same speed. If you want to see how these trends show up in our area, let's talk.

Affordability won't snap back overnight, but like a ship finally catching a steady tailwind, it's now sailing in the right direction.

Inventory Is Making a Comeback in 2026

After a long stretch where buyers were competing for too few homes, inventory has made a comeback over the past year. And depending on where you live, that's opening up your options in a meaningful way.

According to Realtor.com, the number of homes available for sale has climbed to its highest level since 2020. And that's another big milestone for the market. Getting back to pre-pandemic levels signals a slow and steady return to what's typical (see graph below):

Now, it's worth noting, nationally the market isn't there yet – and having more inventory won't suddenly "fix" everything. But the growth the market has seen lately still changes how competitive it feels.

- When there are more homes for sale, buyers gain time, options, and leverage.
- When there aren't, the pressure ramps up quickly.

In the years since 2020, there haven't been enough homes for sale, and that's made the market feel different. Rushed. Stressful. Intimidating.

But now it's finally getting better.

A Growing Portion of the Country Is Getting Back to Normal

Depending on where you live, inventory growth is going to vary. Some places are bouncing back faster than others.

According to Lance Lambert, Co-Founder of ResiClub, in January 2025, just a little over one year ago, only 41 of the 200 largest metros were back to normal inventory.

But around the end of year, almost half (90) of the largest 200 metro areas were back at or above typical levels. That's a big improvement in roughly a year. And it's not done yet.

Inventory Is Expected To Keep Growing

Looking ahead, forecasts say the number of homes for sale could rise another 10% this year, which means even more markets should join the list of places where supply has rebounded.

Here's a graph that shows what an extra 10% would do for the market this year. You can see that projected growth (shown in the dotted line) hits inventory levels seen in 2017-2019 by roughly this fall (the gray lines). That means things may be normal by end of year, nationally:

If the Number of Homes for Sale Goes Up Another 10% in 2026, Inventory Will Be Close to 2017-2019 Levels

Active Monthly Listings Count, in Thousands

That changes your home search in a good way. As Hannah Jones, Senior Economic Research Analyst at Realtor.com, puts it:

“ . . . housing market conditions are gradually rebalancing after several years of extreme seller advantage.

Buyers are beginning to see more options and modest negotiating power as inventory improves . . .”

In other words, the market is starting to work with buyers again — not against them.

Bottom Line

Inventory isn't fully back to normal everywhere. But it's moving in the right direction. And, in some areas, it's already there.

If you've been waiting for a moment when you have options, and a little breathing room, this is the strongest setup buyers have seen in a long time.

If you want to know what's happening in our local market, let's talk.

With housing inventory levels reaching five-year highs, home buyers in nearly every region of the country are in a better position to negotiate more favorable terms.

Why a Newly Built Home Might Be a Smart Move Right Now

Are you looking for better prices? You might find it in an unexpected place: a newly built home. That's why more buyers are choosing new construction. It's not just about getting the latest technology or modern floorplans. It's because they may be able to get a better deal.

There are more brand-new homes available right now than there has been in years. And as a buyer, that can help you in two big ways. It gives you more options, and it motivates builders to sell their inventory before they build more. That's exactly why so many homebuilders are offering serious incentives like price cuts, mortgage rate buydowns, and help with closing costs.

And perks like that are hard to ignore. That's why, in 2025, new home sales hit their highest level in over 3 years. Buyers saw the opportunity, and they jumped on it. Maybe you should do the same.

Builder Incentives Are at an All-Time High

Data from the National Association of Home Builders (NAHB) shows 65% of builders offered special perks to buyers.

That's the highest percentage in 5 years. Here's a quick rundown of some of the most common ones:

- Help with Closing Costs: Some builders are covering thousands of dollars in fees to reduce the upfront cost of buying.
- Extra Upgrades: Think premium finishes, appliance packages, and designer features, often added at no extra cost.
- Mortgage Rate Buydowns: This is when the builder pays to get you a lower mortgage rate, which reduces your monthly payments. Right now, buyers can get a rate roughly a half a percentage point lower on new homes than buyers on existing homes, thanks to builder incentives.

of builders
cut prices

Source: NAHB

And you don't have to be lucky to see these types of perks. The vast majority of builders are offering advantages like these right now.

Builders Are Cutting Prices

Another common incentive they're offering is adjusting the price. According to NAHB, 36% of builders are doing price cuts. And the typical cut is 6%.

So, builders may be more willing to negotiate on price than you'd expect. And that means your dollar may go further if you buy a newly built home.

Lean on your agent to see what's available and what incentives builders are offering in and around your area.

Bottom Line

With most builders offering generous incentives and a wider selection of new homes for sale, buyers may be looking at one of the best times in years to buy a new build.

Let's connect if you want to know which communities, builders, and incentives offer the most value in our market today. And know this: having your own agent (not the builder's representative) makes the sale and negotiation process much easier for you.

If you could have an all-new home for less than you may expect, would you be interested?

Should You Buy an Existing Home Or a Newly Built One?

If you're torn on whether you want to focus your search on new construction homes or existing ones, here are some differences that could help you decide.

Benefits of an Existing Home

A wider variety of floor plans and styles

Details that add charm and character

More mature landscaping and neighborhoods

Benefits of a Brand-New Home

Ability to customize certain features during the build

Won't need repairs or renovation work up front

Energy efficient features may be standard

Both options have their perks; it just depends on what matters most to you.

The Top Two Buyer Mistakes Today

In today's market, you'll want to be sure you have advice from a team of professionals. Here are the top two mistakes other buyers are making right now, and how your agent or lender can help you avoid each one.

1. Putting Off Pre-Approval

As part of the homebuying process, a lender will look at your finances to figure out what they're willing to let you borrow for your mortgage. This will help you really wrap your head around the financial side of things before you start looking at homes.

While house hunting can be a lot more fun than talking about finances, you don't want to do this out of order.

Make sure you get your pre-approval first before you go house hunting. As CNET explains:

"If you wait to get preapproved until the last minute, you might be scrambling to contact a lender and miss the opportunity to put a bid on a home."

2. Buying More House Than You Can Afford

With today's mortgage rates and home prices, it's even more important to avoid stretching your budget too far. This is especially true because other housing expenses like home insurance and taxes are on the rise.

Be sure to factor these expenses into your budget so you don't overextend. Bankrate offers this advice:

"Focus on what monthly payment you can afford rather than fixating on the maximum loan amount you qualify for. Just because you can qualify for a $300,000 loan doesn't mean you can comfortably handle the monthly payments that come with it along with your other financial obligations."

Bottom Line

The good news is, you don't have to deal with any of these headaches if you have the right partner by your side. Let's connect so you have a pro who can help you avoid these costly mistakes.

Things To Avoid After Applying for a Mortgage

As part of the homebuying process, once a lender has reviewed your finances, you want to be as consistent as possible.

Don't change bank accounts.

Don't apply for new credit or close any credit accounts.

Don't deposit cash into your accounts before speaking with your bank or lender.

Don't co-sign other loans for anyone.

Don't make any large purchases.

The best advice? Once you've submitted your mortgage application, always talk to your lender before doing anything financial in nature.

5 Reasons You Need an Agent When Buying a Home

When it comes to buying a home, expert advice from a trusted real estate agent is priceless, now more than ever. And here's why. An agent does a lot more than you may realize.

Your agent is the person who will guide you through every step when buying a home, and they'll look out for your best interests along the way. They smooth out a complex process and take away the bulk of the stress of what's likely your largest purchase ever. And that's exactly what you want and deserve.

This is at least part of the reason why a survey from Bright MLS found an overwhelming majority of people agree an agent is a key part of the homebuying process (see visual below):

Of respondents agree "It would be very stressful to navigate the home buying process without a real estate agent or broker."

Of respondents believe "A real estate agent or broker is an essential, trusted advisor for a homebuyer."

Source: Bright MLS

To get a better idea of just a few of the top ways agents add value, check out this list.

- Deliver Industry Expertise: The right agent – the professional – will coach you through everything from start to finish. With professional training and expertise, agents know the ins and outs of the buying process. And in today’s complex market, the way real estate transactions are executed is constantly changing, so having expert advice on your side is essential.
- Provide Expert Local Knowledge: In a world that’s powered by data, a great agent can clarify what it all means, separate fact from fiction, and help you understand how current market trends apply to your unique search. From how quickly homes are selling to the latest listings you don’t want to miss, they can explain what’s happening in your specific local market so you can make a confident decision.
- Explain Pricing and Market Value: Agents help you understand the latest pricing trends in your area. What’s a home valued at in your market? What should you think about when making an offer? Is this a house that might have issues you can’t see on the surface? No one wants to overpay, so having an expert who really gets true market value for individual neighborhoods is priceless. An offer that’s both fair and competitive in today’s housing market is essential, and a local expert knows how to help you hit the mark.
- Review Contracts and Fine Print: In a fast-moving and heavily regulated process, agents help you make sense of the necessary disclosures and documents, so you know what you’re signing. Having a professional that’s trained to explain the details could make or break your transaction and is certainly something you don’t want to try to figure out on your own.
- Bring Negotiation Expertise: From offer to counteroffer and inspection to closing, there are a lot of stakeholders involved in a real estate transaction. Having someone on your side who knows you and the process makes a world of difference. An agent will advocate for you as they work with each party. It’s a big deal, and you need a partner at every turn to land the best possible outcome.

Bottom Line

Real estate agents are specialists, educators, and negotiators. They adjust to market changes and keep you informed. And keep in mind, every time you make a big decision in your life, especially a financial one, you need an expert on your side. Expert advice from a trusted professional is priceless.

If you've been waiting to buy, now is a good time to be looking. You'll have more to choose from, and you can afford more.
